rituals of spring (for the 78th anniversary of the shirtwaist factory fire)

Safiya Henderson-Holmes from bareness to fullness flowers do bloom whenever, however spring enters a room oh, whenever, however spring enters a room

March 25th, 1911 at the triangle shirtwaist factory a fire claimed the lives of 146 people, mostly women, mostly children in the plume of their lives, in the room of their lives begging for spring, toiling and begging for spring and in my head as i read the history, afraid to touch the pictures i imagine the room, i imagine the women dressed in pale blues and pinks, some without heads or arms –sitting some without legs or waist –hovering hundreds of flowering girls tucking spring into sleeves, tucking and tugging at spring to stay alive and so a shirtwaist for spring a dress with a mannish collar, blousing over breast, blousing over sweat, tapering to fit a female waist, tapering to fit a female breath sheer silk, cotton, linen hand done pleats, hands done in by pleats hands done in by darts and lace colors of spring pale blues, pale pinks, yellows, magentas, lavender, peach, secret thoughts of spring falling in love under a full moon, forever young with money enough to buy a flower or two, time enough to smell it yes, from bareness to fullness a flower will bloom anytime, everytime spring enters a room and here, near these machines, hundreds of flowering girls shirtwaist factory room 1911 crowded, hard, fast, too fast, closed windows, locked doors, smell of piss, of sweat, of wishes being cut to bits, needle stabs, electric shocks, miscarriages of over silk, fading paisley, fading magenta, falling in love will get you fired, forever old, ever fast enough, buying flowers is wasteful so hurry, hurry, grind your teeth and soul six dollars a week send to grandfather, four dollars a week send to aunt ruth, sleep over the machine and you’re done for, way before you open your eyes ma’m, madam, miss, mrs. mother, girlie hundreds of flowering green spring girls in rows waiting with needs in hands for spring to show women workers from ireland, poland, germany, france, england, grenada, mississippi thin clothes, thinner hopes, months full of why, of how, of when answers always less than their pay but the sewing machines grew like weeds, thick snake roots strangling the flowers everyday, strangling the roses, daisies, lilies everyday hundreds of blooming girls hundreds of blooming, spring girls the shirtwaist building 1911

135 feet high, wooden, cold, three floors, not enough stairs, one fire escape ending in mid-air, ending in the spring mid-air a tender room of hundreds of blooming bright girls hundreds of daisy bud girls who pray for spring to enter their world, who pray and sweat for spring to enter their world the strike the year before and they shouted; open the doors, unwire the windows, more air, more stairs, more quiet time, more fire escapes and to the ground damn you, and more toilets, more time to be sick, more time to be well, and remove the fear and slow it down, for god’s sake, slow it all time, it’s spring they shouted

hundreds of flowering girls, hundreds of flowering girls shouted for spring to hurry, hurry and enter their world and triangle won a half day, but the doors remained locked, windows remained wired, no extra air, no extra quiet time, or sick time, the fear stayed, nothing slowed and god watched hundreds of flowering girls twirl hundreds of flowering girls willow and twirl march 25th 1911 at triangle a worker is expendable

a sewing needle is not a worker is bendable
a worker can be sent straight to hell a sewing needle is heaven sent and must be protected well a sewing needle is the finger of god
over hundreds of flowering girls, hundreds of flowering sweet dandelion girls march 25th, smoke smoke, stopping the machines run to wired windows, run to locked doors, run to the one and only fire escape, everyone run to the air

smoke stopping eyes, stopping hearts, stopping worlds elevator move faster, elevator you are a machine managed by a human being move faster, c' mon faster carry all the flowering girls, carry all the sweet, sweet orchid girls

fire catching bouquets of girls in a corner, tall, long stemmed lilies on fire in a corner, from bloom to ashes in a corner, smell them in the rain hundreds of tulip girls on a window ledge pelees for life, on a window ledge lovely, ribboned young ladies on their tiptoes twirling, twirling an arabesque for life
smell them in the rain hundreds of jasmine girls the ladders were too short the hoses were too short the men holding the nets were not gods, only men who were never trained to catch falling bodies, or falling stars, or hundreds of flowering girls, hundreds of carnation bud girls and the girls were girls not angels jumping, not goddesses flying or hovering they smashed, they broke into large pieces, smell them in the rain and the sidewalks opened in shame to meet the flowering girls the sidewalks opened in such horrible shame to cradle the remains of violets and the gutters bled for hours, choking on bones, shoes, buttons, ribbons, holy sewing needles the gutters bled for hours all the colors of spring the cool magenta of delicate spring and the fire ate the locked doors and the wired windows, ate the fast machines in their narrow rooms, ate the lace and hand done pleats, the silk, the cotton, the linen, the crisp six dollars a week, the everal buzz of someone else’s dreams nightmares and screams of quiet girls, loud skull cracking noises from shy girls smell them in the rain, the lilacs, daffodils in the rain spring, 78 years later triangle is now part of a university, with offices and polished intellect, arched unwired windows, hydraulically controlled and unlocked doors, air conditioning, swivel chairs, marble walls and fire alarms but oh, hundreds of flowering girls still roam hundreds of blushing spring girls still roam 78 years later in the paint, in the chrome in the swivel of the chairs hundreds of blossoms twirling in the air daring to descend if ever, oh ever the fire comes again yes, like lead they will drop if ever, oh ever the fire comes again to hundreds of flowering girls smell them in the rain, iris, peonies, magnolias bending for the rain
